Grubb R.A.F., the medals comprising 1939-45 Star, Burma Star and War Medal, together with research material. Grubb commenced training as a Navigator at No. 5 Air Observation School in April 1943 and was posted to No. 89 Squadron, a Beaufighter unit based in India - but with forward units in Burma - in November 1944. Teaming-up with Flying Officer G. Johnson, he went operational in the New Year with three nighttime low-level "Rhubarbs" and an offensive reconnaissance, the latter operation on 27 January entailing the strafing of enemy gun positions in the Singu area. This, too, the same month in which his aircraft nearly came to grief on a regular patrol on the 4th:

'Flying Officers Johnson and Grubb were flying from Tuliha to Baighachi, with Flight Sergeant Allan as a passenger. After 30 minutes, the port engine of X. 7895 (T) failed. Having feathered the propellor, they diverted to Agartala, but were unable to make R./T. contact, so they fired several red Verey signals before making a single-engined approach. Even so, a transport aircraft was below and ahead of them on finals and they touched down 50 yards behind it - Gordon Johnson applied the handbrake to stop and the starboard tyre burst and the port undercarriage collapsed.'

Having emerged unscathed from X. 7895 (T), pilot and navigator returned to regular operational sorties throughout February-April 1945, in addition to a "Scramble" on 20 March, when Grubb's aircraft failed to catch three "Bandits" over Meiktila but experienced memorably heavy and accurate A.A. fire. And as verified by an endorsement in his Flying Log Book, he had completed over 75 hours of operational flying by the time of V.J. Day. He returned to the U.K. for demobilisation in the rank of Flying Officer in November 1945.

This sword was inspected by Philip Lankester of the Royal Armouries, Tower of London and John Tofts White, who was a renowned expert of Hounslow sword manufacturing in the 17th century. His research resulted in a record of more than one hundred surviving Hounslow swords around the world. His opinion was that this sword blade was jointed (welded) into the hilt tang to provide a soft more flexible hilt on a hard blade. Sword and plug bayonet blades of this period were often made in this way. The alternative is that it is an old repair to a favoured blade. Hounslow broadswords by Kindt (also anglicized to John Kennett) are rare. Two further examples are known to exist and are in the V&A.
