Footnote:- Oliver Alfred Maynard Bridges was killed on 19.4.1951 when H.M.S. Affray, the submarine on which he was serving as Stoker Mechanic, was involved in the worst submarine accident since the Second World War.
H.M.S. Affray left Portsmouth and submerged 30 miles south of the Isle of Wight whilst on a practise war patrol between Portsmouth and Falmouth. After an investigation, the Royal Navy concluded that the submarine sank because the snort mask - the tube through which the diesel engine "breathed" while steaming at periscope depth - snapped because of metal fatigue. Another theory was that a battery had exploded. The submarine was never recovered because of the depth of water it had sunk in and the distance from the coast made a full salvage operation impossible
